

Fresh from the farm

After the winter rains, spring produce draws shoppers to Menlo Park's Farmers Market

By Jane Knoerle Almanac Lifestyles Editor

No one is happier about sunny days than the farmers who bring their produce each Sunday to the Menlo Park Farmers Market.

Now that the unrelenting periods of rain and cold weather are past, visiting the market is a little like a treasure hunt: Each week something new turns up.

Last week the first of the stone fruit appeared — apricots, peaches, nectarines. Expensive to be sure, but prices should drop as the quantity increases.

"It's been a frustrating time for the farmers," says Lori Hennings, who's been the market manager since it opened in 1992. "The rains caused plants to be vulnerable to viruses. For example, the asparagus season got hit really hard."

These warm days should allow some catch-up time. The cherries and blueberries just started coming in, and Ms. Hennings is hoping to see melons, tomatoes and sweet corn by July.

The best time to visit the market is when it opens at 9:30 a.m. Vendors scurrying around putting up signs or filling baskets. There are glistening piles of multi-colored peppers. Ruby-red strawberries spill from baskets. Designer greens, the first to wilt in the sun, are still fresh and dewy.

Regulars also know that their favorite vendors, like Howard McGinnis, will sell out early. Mr. McGinnis has plenty of sweet strawberries, but fans will have to wait awhile for his assortment of baby squashes and slender little haricots verts (green beans).

Farmers Markets in the Islands

I got hooked on farmers' markets during recent stays at Princeville on Kauai's north shore. We stayed in a condo and enjoyed cooking with fruits and vegetables brought home from nearby markets.

The farmers' market held on Tuesday afternoons on Route 560 out of Hanalei toward Ke'e Beach is the big one, but we preferred the funky little gathering on Saturday mornings at the Kilauea Plantation Center, across from the post office.

Farmers just drive their pick-ups in, unload the stuff on rickety tables, and you help yourself.

Sometimes a vendor has only a couple of boxes of papayas picked from his backyard. They're ripe and sweet and cost about $1 apiece. Fat Persian limes are five for a dollar.

One woman's old truck was a real treasure chest. Out came apple bananas (smaller and tastier than regular bananas), red chard, spinach, white eggplant, Thai basil, eggs gathered that morning, gardenias carefully encased in plastic bags, plumeria leis and some fresh macadamia nuts. She cracked them for us on an old anvil.

Raw honey and goat cheese were also for sale, but we didn't find any of the delicious smoked salmon sampled on our last trip.

We had to try a fresh coconut ($1) with the top cut off to sip out the juice, and couldn't resist a bouquet of tropical blooms, such as heliconia (lobster claw) and pink ginger, which cost all of $5.

Taking home produce harvested that morning and cooking it that night gave me a new appreciation of farmers' markets. They put you in touch with where food really comes from and give you a chance to meet the people who grow it.

Longtime Menlo vendors

Many vendors at Menlo Park's market have been coming since the market opened 14 years ago. Pietro Parravano is one of them. His fish stand at the entrance of the market is always busy and sells out early, especially the salmon and Dungeness crab.

Mr. Parravano has been a fisherman since 1982, launching his boat, the "Anne B," out of Half Moon Bay. He has sold his catch at the Palo Alto farmers' market since 1987, and the Menlo Park market since it was established.

Before trading careers, he was a student, then a teacher, at Woodside Priory. He taught science classes, and often sees former classmates and students at the market.

Why the career switch? "It was just a calling I had. A lot of challenges came together. I like connecting the ocean to the home," he says.

Howard McGinnis has been coming to Menlo Park for 13 years from his farm in north Monterey County. He sells at five markets a week including the Ferry Building Market in San Francisco on Tuesdays and Saturdays.

Mr. McGinnis says raising and selling flowers kept him in business during the wet winter. "We had 150,000 tulips."

Other originals are the folks at Twin Girls Farm in Dinuba (the Central Valley), who drive four hours every week to sell their wares, including Rainier cherries, oranges and apricots.

Shoppers miss two longtime favorites. Eddie Ziff, restaurateur Jesse Cool's dad, with his ready smile and a sprig of parsley tucked behind his ear, was a fixture at the market. Sadly, he died in 2002. This year Giuseppe Pumbo, who worked along with Eddie, died in Rome on April 18. "He used to break out in opera (arias)," Ms. Hennings recalls.

Lions Club project

As it has since the beginning, the Live Oaks Lions Club manages the operation of the market. With the market, the club raises more than $30,000 a year to benefit its charitable projects.

At present, there are about 35 booths that rent for $22 for a 10-foot stall. In order to sell produce and other merchandise at the market, vendors must have a producer's certificate from their county's agricultural commissioners indicating which crops they grow. The certificate lets buyers know the produce comes from the farm that is bringing it to market.

With supermarkets now featuring large sections of organic food, does it still make sense to shop at a farmers' market? I think it does. You feel the connection between the farmers who grow the food and those who consume it. And it's satisfying to eat a really ripe peach or make a salad from greens picked just hours earlier. ■

Arby's closes its doors after 30-year run in Menlo Park

The funky striped metal patio umbrellas are gone. The windows are taped. After 30 years in Menlo Park, Arby's restaurant, specializing in roast beef sandwiches, closed May 7.

A sign in the window says the nationwide chain, which boasts

3,500 restaurants, lost its lease and is "working hard to find a new Mid Peninsula location."

The Arby's property at 760 El Camino Real is owned by the Crumrine family, owners of the adjoining Cook's Seafood Restaurant and Market. Cook's Seafood has been a Menlo Park institution since 1928.

The Crumrine family is looking at potential future uses for the property and considering "a lot of things," according to Mike Crumrine, son of owner Roy Crumrine. "We're going to take our time."

Meanwhile, if you have any ideas for a new location, the folks at Arby's corporate headquarters asks you to give them a call at 415-457-066. Its sign promises, "We'll be back!"

COMING SOON!!!

A CHARMING CAPE COD IN THE COUNTRY... with incredible views of the Western Hills

Harmony and proportion pervade this Central Woodside house and its gardens, showing that classicism is at home...even on the range.

The delightful home belonged to very good housing stock from the 1940's. An obligation came with the property because it was an icon that stood for civility and gentility. The proportions and layout were American. It has been remodeled/expanded... lightened and brightened without changing its bones. The house has been completely reworked inside but without leaving any fingerprints. It is impossible to separate the old from the new. There is a lack of pretense, a simple dedication to what the house was meant to be. A perfection has been created that never quite existed the first time around. However... when you walk in, you'll know... it has always been loved!

Situated on 2+ Acres on a quiet street in the Woodside School District with walking paths leading to town.

The property features:

- A spacious family residence with four bathrooms that has the flexibility to accommodate up to five bedrooms
- The finest appliances (Bosch, Subzero, Thermador), Anderson Doors and Windows, Marble Countertops. Hardwood Floors, and Connecticut Bluestone Walkways and Patios
- Two-stall barn with adjoining pasture, a vineyard, an absolutely gorgeous swimming pool/spa with cabana and lovely gardens on all sides
- The new septic system was designed to allow for a guest house
