Menlo Park couple finds the cycling life romantic, heady and healthful

“It’s an addiction,” Jesse Bastide of Menlo Park acknowledges as he talks of his passion for cycling. “You start getting faster and better — and that’s fun.”

Riding his bike — to work, for recreation and in competitive events — has become even more fun for Mr. Bastide over the past year and a half: His longtime love affair with cycling last year led to another love in his life, who now is not only his regular riding partner but his wife as well.

And although Victoria Bastide-Vallstrom hasn’t been riding competitively for nearly as long as her husband, she and Jesse are making quite the name for themselves in the cycling world.

In September, the two accomplished a remarkable feat in the Tour de Menlo cycling event that begins at Menlo-Atherton High School: Victoria set a new record in the women’s division, placing first, and Jesse tied for first place, with Robert Pasco of Belmont, in the men’s division, also setting a record.

It was the first time they participated in the 50-mile course, which consists of five hill-climbs totaling 5,000 feet.

Expanding horizons

Born in Sweden, Ms. Bastide-Vallstrom says that when she moved to this country, she couldn’t afford a car, and commuted to school and work on a bicycle.

“In Sweden, (bicycles are) a way of life, so when I got here, it was natural to ride,” she says.

Her enjoyment of riding through local terrain led to expanding horizons; in 2005, she began exploring options for group riding and racing, but it was only last January that she entered her first race.

Now 30, she races almost every weekend as a member of the Palo Alto-based PABW Powered by Tibco team.

The cycling obsession struck Mr. Bastide at age 13. Born in France, where competitive cycling is a popular sport, he moved at age 5 to Maine. But his memories of the cycling world of France lingered. “Something stuck — there’s something so romantic about it that attracted me,” says Mr. Bastide, 27.

Three years ago he decided “the biking would be better” in California and moved to the Bay Area. Eventually, he and Ms. Bastide-Vallstrom ended up at the same software company, VMware in Palo Alto, although they worked in different buildings. She’s a quality assurance manager, and he’s a QA engineer.

Last year, when Ms. Bastide-Vallstrom was becoming increasingly interested in the cycling world beyond commuting, “I heard a rumor at work about this fast biker guy” named Jesse, she recounts. She e-mailed him, an acquaintance was made, and they decided to go for a ride.

The first time they set off together, “I thought, wow! She has a real motor,” Mr. Bastide recalls. “I had to work hard to keep up.”

He obviously didn’t mind making the effort. “We biked for a couple of months, then figured we liked each other off the bike,” Ms. Bastide-Vallstrom says, glancing at her grinning husband.

Before moving to Menlo Park in May, the couple commuted on their bikes to Palo Alto from San Francisco. Last summer, they flew to Sweden to get married. While there, they took a two-day 300-mile bike ride — something they don’t plan to try again. “Once you’ve biked more than seven and a half hours at one time, it ceases to be fun,” he says wryly.

A way of life

Their shared love of cycling goes beyond an “addiction,” Mr. Bastide notes. “It’s really a lifestyle, and we enjoy it,” he says.

Their sleep and eating habits are geared to support the considerable energy they put into cycling, and that means that “the food bill has really gone up,” Ms. Bastide-Vallstrom laughs. “We eat more organic food, real food, made from scratch,” she says, adding that their meals include much protein and carbohydrates.

At work, they say, they get a lot of “double takes” from their colleagues at lunchtime because of the quantity and type of food they bring from home to eat.

But they reap plenty of benefits from this lifestyle, they note. “We both have desk jobs,” Ms. Bastide-Vallstrom says. With all their riding and healthful eating, “we’re more productive at work. ... There’s less stress, and I’m a much more happy person.”

Exploring options

While both cyclists enjoy racing, Ms. Bastide-Vallstrom also emphasizes the social aspects of riding, particularly as a part of a team. Mr. Bastide, who calls cycling for men “a testosterone fest,” recently joined a team as well, called Kovarus/Squadra Ovest.

People who are interested in exploring their options in the biking world might start by riding with local groups. “You don’t have to be a member to test out a group — you just show up,” Ms. Bastide-Vallstrom says.

They mention Peninsula groups such as Alto Velo and Peninsula Velo as possibilities.

Ms. Bastide-Vallstrom recommends finding a personal coach if you’re serious about training for road cycling and racing. Her coach is Linda Jackson, a cyclist in the 1996 Summer Olympics who manages the PABW racing team she rides with.

A coach, Ms. Bastide-Vallstrom says, can help novices avoid common mistakes. For example, inexperienced riders eager to fully participate in cycling events “tend to go hard all the time,” she says. A coach can moderate that urge and “can give you long-term goals.”

Mr. Bastide notes that would-be

INFORMATION

Jesse Bastide recommends checking out online coaching programs such as:

- trainingpeaks.com
- Carmichael Training Systems at trainright.com

cyclists can also avail themselves of online advice and training programs, such as trainingpeaks.com and Carmichael Training Systems.

He also recommends consulting Joe Friel’s “The Cyclist’s Training Bible.”

Finding the right bicycle shouldn’t be a problem with local bike shops that allow customers to go for a “demo ride,” taking the bike out on the road rather than only to the back parking lot, Mr. Bastide says. But test riding three or four bikes in the lot can also be a good way to ensure that the bike is a good fit.

Ms. Bastide-Vallstrom recommends taking advantage of resources such as the speaker series offered by Palo Alto Bicycles on University Avenue. A series now scheduled there has two more Wednesday evening talks: “Descending,” on Nov. 8; and Nutrition and Racing, on Nov. 15.

She also recommends the Northern California and Nevada Cycling Association Web site for people seeking information about racing. That’s at ncna.org. ■

Stanford seeks volunteers for study on depression

Stanford University School of Medicine is seeking 300 volunteers for a study focusing on the role of genes in depression.

People who have had depression before the age of 31, who have experienced at least two depressive episodes, and who have at least one sibling or parent with depression may be eligible to participate in the study.

Dr. Douglas Levinson, professor of psychiatry and behavioral sciences at Stanford, is leading the study.

During the four-year study, researchers at six universities will gather information on personal and family mental health history from people with major depressive disorder. They will also collect blood samples to conduct DNA studies.

Curious about the Riekes Center? An open house is set for Sunday, Nov. 12, from 4 p.m. to 5:30 p.m., followed by a fundraising dinner, at the nonprofit mentoring organization founded by Gary Riekes of Woodside.

A highlight of the evening is a preview of the documentary on Nepal filmed by local high school students who are part of the Riekes Center's film and video program. A story about the group's adventures during their recent trip to Nepal appeared in the Oct. 11 issue of the Almanac.

Located for the past 10 years in a sprawling former warehouse at 3455 Edison Way in the North Fair Oaks area, the Riekes Center offers middle and high school students opportunities to improve in athletics and the arts through summer and after-school programs. The 40,000 square-foot space houses a modern athletic facility, batting cages, a nature studies department, a sound room and a video center. The center also offers financial aid and work-study arrangements.

Dinner tickets cost $20 in advance, and quantities are limited. Call Peggy Mallison at 298-3404 for tickets. For general information about the Riekes Center and its programs, call 364-2509 or go to www.Riekes.org.
