

THE ART OF KAISEKI

Restaurant owners Keiko and Toshio Sakuma share a laugh by the sushi bar at Kaygetsu.

KAYGETSU RESTAURANT OFFERS THE AMERICAN PALATE AN UNFAMILIAR JAPANESE CUISINE EXPERIENCE — AND THE CRITICS ARE RAVING

What do you think of when you hear the words “Japanese food”?

If you’re like most Americans, you probably think sushi and teriyaki and tempura.

Toshio and Keiko Sakuma decided several years ago to do their part to broaden that definition, at least in the minds of Peninsula diners. After owning and operating a successful sushi bar in Menlo Park for nine years, they changed course in 2004.

“We knew we were going against the flow, but we wanted to let people know there’s more to Japanese food than sushi,” Keiko Sakuma says.

Story by Renee Batti

As their Kaygetsu restaurant celebrates the third anniversary, this month, of its opening in the Sharon Heights Shopping Center in Menlo Park, the Sakumas are basking in a glow of success they couldn’t have imagined possible when they made the decision to buck the trend and introduce local diners to elegant, traditional kaiseki cuisine.

Just in the last four months, Kaygetsu:

■ Won a rating of 28 out of 30 from the influential Zagat Survey. (To give an idea of Zagat’s standards: Alice Waters’ Chez Panisse is rated 28; Thomas Keller’s French Laundry is rated 29.)

■ Was named by Michael Bauer, food editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, one of the top 10 restaurants reviewed by the Chronicle in 2006.

■ Was included in the Chronicle’s listing of the top 100 restaurants in the Bay Area in last Sunday’s magazine.

With those accolades and the great reviews given the restaurant by Bay Area food critics, the Sakumas find they are broadening the definition of Japanese food not only for Peninsula diners but for adventurous food lovers all over the Bay Area and beyond.

The Yaki mono plate is composed of grilled ocean trout topped with sake lees, and served with Brussels sprouts and orange salad.

Traditional and seasonal

Keiko Sakuma knows of only four other restaurants in the Bay Area featuring kaiseki, a cuisine whose origins are in the rigidly formal Japanese tea ceremony.

— usually seven to nine courses — that features premium seasonal ingredients. The carefully ordered presentation of the food on serving ware of ceramic, bamboo, lacquer and other material is an essential feature of the cuisine: The food must delight the eyes as well as the palate.

Samples of some courses on Kaygetsu's menu, which changes every six weeks, are: scallop and shrimp, wrapped with cherry leaf and deep-fried, served with green tea salt; grilled ocean trout, topped with sake lees, with Brussels sprouts and orange salad; and sliced duck, cooked with egg, served over rice, with clear soup with fish somen noodles.

The seven-course kaiseki meal served at Kaygetsu is not as formal as the original tea ceremony-based kaiseki, says Toshio Sakuma. There aren't the strict rules to follow, and rather than tea, diners often drink sake. "Here, you enjoy time, enjoy drinking sake, enjoy food," he says.

Artists in the kitchen

The thrill of exploring an unfamiliar cuisine and tradition is surely a factor in fans' enthusiasm for Kaygetsu. But it doesn't explain the raves the restaurant is receiving among food critics and demanding diners. Beautifully sculpted food aesthetically arranged on a plate would be merely a target of ridicule if it tasted bad.

Not much chance of that at Kaygetsu. Chefs Katsuhiko Yamasaki and Shinichi Aoki call upon the skills learned while studying the art of kaiseki in Kyoto, its birthplace. Mr. Yamasaki worked for Kitcho in Kyoto, a restaurant famous for its kaiseki; Mr. Aoki also began his chef's career in Kyoto, then worked for a Japanese restaurant in New York for five years before coming to the West Coast.

Both men worked for the Sakumas when they owned Toshi's on El Camino Real in Menlo Park, putting their kaise-ki skills on hold while working in the kitchen with Mr. Sakuma, a Tokyo-trained sushi chef.

When the Sakumas decided they wanted to try something different after nine years of operating Toshi's, the choice of kaiseki was made even easier by the fact that two kaiseki chefs were already in their midst.

A risky enterprise

Because kaiseki was almost unheard of in this country, the Sakumas realized they were taking a risk with their new endeavor.

"But there were too many restaurants going fusion, and there were a lot of sushi restaurants, so we wanted to have a restaurant with more authentic food, food in the traditional form," Ms. Sakuma says. "We thought people would be interested in real Japanese food."

One reason the Sakumas were ready for a change was that the work at the small, popular Toshi's was physically demanding, Ms. Sakuma explains. They thought operating a kaiseki restaurant would mean that the pace would be slower, and the stress, lower, she says.

But developing a base of patrons was a slow process. "It was kind of scary at first," Ms. Sakuma says.

Now, although the physical demands are fewer, operating Kaygetsu has been "mentally demanding," she says. The high praise and Zagat rating have upped the pressure for the couple. "We have to meet people's expectations, and pay attention

The kaiseki menu this spring begins with Sakizuke — seared toro nigiri sushi, Monterey squid with vinegar miso sauce, yamaimo potato and snap peas in sesame sauce, and fava bean soup.

The tipping point: Is gratuity necessary for restaurant wine?

By Mark Chamness

Special to the Almanac

Like most people, I enjoy going out to dinner. Yet one moment always gives me grief — deciding on the tip, especially when wine is included in the bill.

It's customary to tip 15 to 20 percent at restaurants, but I often wonder if wine requires a change to that equation. Call me etiquette-challenged.

Nothing generates more controversy and confusion than the subject of tipping on wine. It is the cause of anxiety for many restaurant patrons. Craig Gleason of Los Gatos admits, "I finally decided that the uncertainty it caused me was not worth the amount I saved."

Financially flustered

Purchasing wine can increase the tip considerably. Consider a dinner where food costs $50 and a bottle of wine is $50. Including wine in the tip calculation basically doubles the tip. If you order an expensive bottle of wine for $200, is a $40 tip reasonable for having it served to you?

Restaurant wines are priced at a significant markup to retail; consequently, tipping on the price of wine can add greatly to its expense. A wine costing $20 retail is marked up to $60 at a restaurant. Adding $5 for tax and $12 for tip makes the total cost of the bottle $77. It's no wonder that many people are bringing $50 wines to restaurants and willing to pay $20 for corkage.

Opinions of patrons

"I include the cost of the wine in the tip calculation, but I'm not sure that's a requirement, especially when very expensive wines are included," says JP Miller of Portola Valley.

Alternatively, Bruce Zeiser of Menlo Park says: "I usually pay a tip of 15 to 20 percent of the total food and wine bill (basically double the sales tax) depending on quality of service. If the wine bill or corkage is large, then I drop down to the lower end of the range."

Since restaurants add significant markups on alcohol, many customers feel tipping on wine is an egregious expectation.

Years ago, when I worked in New York City, an older New Yorker advised me to never tip on alcohol. Some locals agree. Pardeep Singh of Belmont advises, "No tip on wines and alcohol purchased from the restaurant that you are having dinner at."

Restaurateurs' views

John Sanders, wine director of Marche in Menlo Park, advocates tipping on the total bottle price. In addition, he advises, "Above anything, tip according to service. A lot of wait staff (think) that because they show up for work they should be tipped."

Jesse Cool, owner of the Flea Street Cafe in Menlo Park, recommends: "Tip on the whole bottle (16-20 percent). Either tip nothing or generously — tend to the extremes."

Check, please

I recommend a solution that is similar to the restaurateurs' advice. Tip 15 to 20 percent on the total bill where wines cost less than $100 per bottle. This should cover most situations.

When wines are purchased that cost more than $100 per bottle, simply add a $20 tip per bottle, which is equivalent to a corkage fee.

Keep in mind that the quality of the restaurant, the service, or the occasion may justify an increase or decrease in the final amount. ■

VISIONARY EYEGLASSES

The future of bifocals may soon resemble the liquid crystal displays (LCD) used in high-tech television sets. Scientists have pioneered lenses with varying electrical voltages that are applied to a thin sheet of liquid crystals between two layers of glass. This construction makes it possible for eyeglasses to allow the eye to focus immediately from long distances to fine print. These devices will make use of a rangefinder that switches the way light is diffracted so that lenses can be focused automatically. These lenses will someday revolutionize the way nearsightedness is corrected by using automatic adjustable focusing power that relies on a series of concentric rings of tiny, transparent electrodes that control the optical power of the thin layer of liquid crystals. Although this technology is no where near ready for the everyday consumer, this peek into a possible future is fascinating none the less.

Eyewear has changed dramatically in the past few years, providing new materials and thousands of options in frames styles and designer names. These changes will continue and yield even lighter, more effective lenses that help wearers enjoy clear vision at all distances. Call MENLO OPTICAL at 322-3900 to schedule an eye exam that includes prescription determination. We carry lightweight lenses and a variety of well-crafted frames in the latest shapes, sizes, and colors. We are located at 1166 University Drive, on the corner of Oak Grove Avenue and University Drive.

PS. If you want to eliminate the line in bi- (and tri-) focals that delineate between far and near vision correction, ask about progressive lenses.
