TheatreWorks' improvisational drama program helps sick children rediscover fun and normality

By Diana Reynolds Roome

In a high hospital bed at the Lucile Packard Children's Hospital at Stanford, 9-year-old Adriana Andrade lies propped on pillows, a bright blue stuffed bear on the bedrail above.

Her face is pale and anxious, and only a few soft wisps remain of her dark hair. She seems to have shrunk under the weight of reality, which at present consists mostly of a disease with the ponderous name of Philadelphia-chromosome-positive acute lymphoblastic leukemia.

But then a little piece of magic happens. The door opens to admit two smiling people — this time not doctors or nurses come to do procedures. They are wearing regular hang-out clothes and their mood is decidedly playful. The tall guy with merry blue eyes and a two-week red beard has a propensity for making outrageous faces. The young woman with a blond ponytail beams at Adriana, her warmth and support palpable.

Taking up positions at each side of her bed, they invite Adriana to join them in a game. At first she seems uncertain, but musters a small smile. They start with a "number conversation," which requires counting as if each word comes from a place of strong feeling: for example, "seven" is decisive, "eight" doubtful, "nine" sad, and "10" surprised. As they take turns, Adriana's eyes dart from one to the other and expression creeps into her face and voice.

A conversation game that allows only questions leads to chuckles: "What's your favorite color?" the man asks Adriana. "Do you shave?" Adriana mischievously replies.

When a couple of nurses come in and attach a new IV line, Adriana is snorting like a pig as she plays "Animal Noises" and appears barely to notice the procedure. By the time her playfellows take their leave, she and her mother (who has moved into the small hospital room with her) are both animated and giggling.

In ordinary life these magic-workers are Michael Champlin and Jennifer Chambers, actors and teaching artists with the Children's Healing Project, a collaboration between TheatreWorks and the Lucile Packard hospital.

Every Wednesday, they work with sick children here, using little more than their own imagination, resourcefulness, and acting skills — plus a big dollop of compassion, though they make a point not to mention illness unless a child wants to bring up the subject. Sometimes they take along a raft of puppets, but often they conjure ideas out of the air, using the children's own interests and sense of humor rather than props.

"These children spend most of their time hearing about diagnosis and disease, and are facing some really frightening things," said Mr. Chambers. "When we go in, we are two people solely focused on them — not poking, prodding or diagnosing. It's a place where they can be themselves, and it makes them feel special."

The healing arts

The Children's Healing Project was the brainchild of Mary Sutton, TheatreWorks' director of education and community outreach, whose own work as a theater artist in a variety of settings taught her how powerfully healing the arts can be.

She and her staff experimented with several programs for at-risk youth and other vulnerable populations before taking a pilot program to Lucile Packard around four years ago. They discovered it could have a profoundly beneficial effect on severely ill children, Ms. Sutton said.

The program now serves patients in the Lucile Packard School, siblings of patients, and the Comprehensive Eating Disorders Program (also run by Lucile Packard) at El Camino Hospital in Mountain View. Children at Lucile Packard who are too ill to go to school can also take part, with the artists visiting their rooms.

The program receives funding from several philanthropic organizations, including the Sand Hill Foundation, American Century Foundation, and ALZA Corp. It's now being developed as a replicable program for other hospitals.

"This program touches kids in such an immediate way," Ms. Sutton said. "We get very positive feedback from parents, doctors and nurses."

Transformations

On one morning, Mr. Champlin and Ms. Chambers are gearing up for a session with a group of a half-dozen children at the Lucile Packard School. At this school, three teachers from the Palo Alto Unified School District help students keep up with lessons while recuperating from operations, awaiting organ transplants, or undergoing treatments for cancer, cystic fibrosis or lupus.

First, Mr. Champlin suggests they think about becoming their favorite food: a taco with cheese and lettuce, for example. Miming a taco is quite a challenge, but the kids have no problem with it.

"I'm an orange," says one small girl dressed all in pink and still attached to her IV. "Oh, I thought you wanted to be a pink," says Mr. Champlin without missing a beat. "I would be a banana split — but not a split banana."

As Mr. Champlin likes to tell the kids, they have three tools that all actors use: imagination, body, voice. Having become tacos, pizzas and apples, the younger children warm up their faces.

Mr. Champlin, who uses his own mobile face to sometimes hilarious effect, tells the kids to open their faces as wide as they can — then to close them up as tight as possible. (Making faces can feel as good as exercise to a child who is unable to move much, and even immune-compromised patients wearing masks join in.) Soon, there's laughter, clapping and squeals of delight.

Then there's a scenario involving some bizarre characters in a grocery store. A star of the scene is a "poopin' puppy" (the epithet got tacked on when the word "puppy" came out a bit distorted) played by Logan Sopeland, who is awaiting a heart transplant. But for now he's down on all fours, beaming. So is his brother, Trent.

It's not just the kids who benefit. Troy Melton is watching his pink-clad daughter, Kayla Rose, smile for the first time since an acute infection almost shut down her liver.

"It's good to see her interacting. Last week she was as pale as a ghost," said Mr. Melton, who drove here from Merced with his wife when they realized their daughter was seriously ill. When Ms. Chambers asks the kids if they'd like one more game, Kayla is the first to respond.

According to Mr. Champlin, a kid's entire physical attitude can change in just 10 to 15 seconds when he or she becomes completely engaged in an activity like this.

"We see kids on the brink of tears start laughing," said Cammy Sunde, who teaches the elementary class at Lucile Packard. "We've even had kids in excruciating pain who wanted to come."

Merry chaos

Whether in the classroom or at a bedside, Mr. Champlin and Ms. Chambers deftly engage children at whatever level they're at, sometimes bringing whole families into improvisations.

"We have a loose plan, but have to take into account who's in the group, and their physical and mental condition," said Ms.

Chambers, an actress who has a degree in psychology with a concentration in drama therapy.

Sometimes, a child takes on the role of director, while the two actors play out zany scenes concocted by all of them together. "We might be two cowboys, on the beach, eating pizza. The kid can tell us to rewind, go back in time and do it again, or they have the power to stop it," Ms. Chambers said.

This sense of control is therapeutic, Ms. Sunde said. "Here they have some power. In the hospital they don't have that."

That sense sometimes comes through what appears to be merry chaos. At a session with junior high and high school students, levels of absurdity skyrocket as Mr. Champlin and a boy wearing a dress-up wig transform themselves into conjoined twins dancing and panicking at a McDonald's in space — while improvising a dialogue that includes the words "chocolate," "flabbergasted," and "zap!" Even a couple of students who started the session looking skeptical succumb to hilarity.

"This really brings kids out of their shell: Kids who are unhappy, depressed and withdrawn can forget their problems," hospital high school teacher Kathy Ho said.

Barbara Sourkes, director of pediatric palliative care at Packard, is also a program supporter.

"The biggest challenge for a child with any kind of medical condition is to try and be a normal child and not become the illness," she said. "Even the parents sometimes lose sight of (that) because they're so worried. But TheatreWorks (and all the arts) cut right through and go to the essence of the person." ■

PEOPLE AND PERFORMANCES IN ARTS AND ENTERTAINMENT

Fine acting lends depth to MP festival's 'Julius Caesar'

By Karen MacLaughlin

Special to the Almanac

In his director's notes to the playbill, Bruce W. De Les Dernier presumes upon a very old friendship with "Will" for leave to combine characters and alter lines in order to accommodate the number and gender of his cast in the Mid-Peninsula Shakespeare Festival's "The Tragedy of Julius Caesar."

He does so seamlessly. In this thorough, yet economical, production, the principals all perform wholeheartedly and well, but it is the supporting roles that lend the performance its depth.

Leslie Newport, as Caesar's canny wife, Calphurnia, exudes a nobility and grace that rivals the late Agnes Moorehead. Eric Lyness, as Lucius, is thoroughly moving in his devotion to his mistress, and Josh Parees, as Senator Decius Brutus, grimaces and gestures his disappointment with terrific comic effect. I almost spilled my free cocoa.

Martin A. David raises goosebumps as the accurate Soothsayer ("Beware the Ides!") and D. Michael Kane draws us the perfect gangster in Senator Cinna. His death scene is a classic.

Sara Trupski and Katie Chaidez flirt and flatter their ways convincingly through Trebonius' and Metellus Cimber's lines.

In this thorough, yet economical, production, the principals all perform wholeheartedly and well, but it is the supporting roles that lend the production its depth.

Casca, played a little too self-consciously in the first act by Rachel Bakker, gains more of our trust by the end and Alison Plott plays Portia with an exquisitely tender savagery.

At all times, Mark D. Pickens keeps the plot moving as the ambitious Cassius. His role carries the greatest burden of interpreting antique language for a modern audience, which included children stretched out in sleeping bags on the lawn.

Director De Les Dernier is unwavering as the turncoat Brutus. Todd Wright is largely likeable as Mark Antony, but is not as clear in his motivation, especially during the bloodied-hand reconciliation with Caesar's assassins, and James Mantell struts his way across the stage in the title role.

Presented in modern dress, with a draper's nod to ancient Rome, this very professional production keeps us on the edge of our seats, wrapped in the blankets the staff has provided to keep out the cool, night air. The whole atmosphere is very quietly professional.

All the festival plays are presented free of charge and the actors pass a basket after the show. They deserve a generous financial hand. ■

INFORMATION

Friday, June 22, is the last opportunity to see "Caesar." The festival continues until June 24, with Shakespeare's "Pericles, Prince of Tyre" staged June 15, 16 and 24; and Moliere's "Tartuffe" staged June 17 and 23. Mid-Peninsula High School is at 1340 Willow Road in Menlo Park. For more information, go to menloplayersguild.org or call 322-3261.

Beautiful grounds of just over one acre, a classic one-level home in pristine condition, and resort-style amenities combine to make this an exceptional offering. The meticulously manicured grounds – from the gated circular entrance to the vast stretches of lawn that wrap around the property – provide an elegant and graceful introduction to this home of over 4,000 square feet. Inside, the fresh finishes, neutral color palette, and traditional appointments of crown moldings and plantation shutters create an inviting ambiance ready to enjoy. Adding to this impressive home is a separate guesthouse with fireplace and full bath, a second full bath convenient to the pool and spa, plus a built-in barbecue center and lighted sport court. Topping it all off is the home's prestigious West Atherton location. www.98Selby.com

Diana Langley Presents

WEST MENLO STORYBOOK CHARM

Open Sat & Sun
1:30 - 4:30pm

1115 Santa Cruz Ave

This lovely home located in wonderful West Menlo Park is situated on a spacious, flat .25 acre lot within convenient walking distance to popular coffee shops, restaurants and grocery stores in downtown Menlo Park.

Constructed for his own family in 1948 by a Master Mason from Chicago, this well-designed brick home was built to last.

The sunlit main floor offers formal living and dining areas, granite breakfast bar, family room and 2-bedrooms/1-bath.

The full basement features an expansive (non-permitted) bonus room, multiple storage areas, large laundry room, bathroom and 2-bedrooms.

The gated, fenced grounds boast several patios that provide multiple entertaining and recreation areas, a separate children's play, lovely rosebushes, fruit trees and professionally maintained landscaping.

The detached two-car garage includes a bathroom with shower and a built-in work table.

Offered at $1,550,000

Proposition 65 Warning

L-3 Communications Randtron Antenna Systems operates facilities located at and around 130 Constitution Dr., Menlo Park which uses and emits chemicals known to the State of California to cause cancer, birth defects, or other reproductive harm. We do not believe that any person is exposed to these chemicals at levels constituting a health or safety risk. However, we have not made a formal determination that actual exposure levels are below the Proposition 65 - no significant risk levels for carcinogens or no observable effect levels for chemicals known to cause reproductive harm, and we have not performed a risk analysis to determine the precise amount of exposure that any individual would receive over a 70-year period. Proposition 65 therefore obligates us to provide this warning to potentially affected individuals. Further information may be obtained by contacting L-3 Communications Randtron Antenna Systems at 650-326-9500, Ext. 427. (Almanac 6/13/07)
