

iPhone, iGroan

By Miles McMullin

Hours waiting in line, more hours driving around in the car, drastic overpricing, and a final product with significant flaws. ... I was not trying to get a malaria vaccine, but the new Apple iPhone 3G, which I planned to buy with my birthday money.

When Steve Jobs announced this product, I never thought I would be spending hours in line to own the hottest new gadget. I was wrong.

I started my quest on July 14, the third day after the product was released. I was hoping the rush would be over and I would only spend an hour in line.

Instead I spent three hours in line that day at the Apple Store in Stanford Shopping Center. Although Apple employees were handing out water to ease the situation, I was not happy.

When I finally got to the front of the line, I learned I had to be 18 years old to buy the iPhone — you have to be the primary account holder on the cell phone account and you need to be 18 for that. I had just turned 17.

Therefore, my mom had to buy the phone and she was not with me. I had not seen this information anywhere online nor had any of the employees told me. So I had to leave the store without my phone.

People now advised me to wait a few weeks for the hype to die down, but getting an iPhone became an obsession, and I would not stop until I had it in my hands.

The next two days I woke up an hour before the stores opened at 10 a.m. and called the three Apple stores in Palo Alto and Burlingame to make sure they had the iPhone in stock. On the second day of my calls, I was told the Apple store on University Avenue in Palo Alto had my phone, so I went there.

I waited 90 minutes before I was informed they were sold out of the color I was looking for. I wanted the 16gig black phone. So I left again without a phone.

On the third day, I called and learned that the Apple Store at Stanford Shopping Center had the phone. I waited in a line outdoors in 90-degree weather for more than three hours.

Hip kids clothing boutique opens in Menlo Park

By Katie Blankenberg

Have you heard the news? The newest kids clothing boutique, named Bubble, has hit downtown Menlo Park with a bang. Proud owners and sisters-in-law Anna Arzhintar and Marina Levy just opened the shop, their second Bubble store. The other, in San Francisco, opened two years ago.

Since then Anna's and Marina's shop has been voted the best kids store by "The View from the Bay," an afternoon TV talk show on Channel 7 in San Francisco, and by CitySearch.com, an online lifestyle guide.

In Menlo Park, the 1,200-square-foot Bubble store opened July 13. It carries clothes for kids from infants to young tweens.

The owners live in San Francisco, so I asked them why they decided to open a store in Menlo Park. Anna told me that many of the customers who shop at the San Francisco store live on the Peninsula. A large number of those customers are Menlo Park moms and grandmothers.

Anna has two sons, ages 7 and 4, and Marina has a 6-year-old daughter. Both owners struggled finding clothing for their little ones, as do many parents. Anna had more difficulty finding clothing for her sons since searching for boys' apparel is more challenging. They decided to open a boutique of children's clothing wear so other parents would not have the same difficulty.

You will find many clothing lines enjoyed by label-conscious adults in mini sizes for the trend-setting little ones, as well as sizes up to 14. Juicy Couture, Paul Frank, True Religion, Ed Hardy and Quicksilver are among the designers carried at Bubble.

Marina and Anna carry clothing that appeals to both parent and child. Bubble is also a great place to find gifts. It carries a selection of fun books, jewelry and accessories.

Bubble also offers complementary gift-wrapping and custom gift baskets. New moms will soon be able to register their newborn children at Bubble as part of a new baby registry designed for the baby who could use a little indulgence in fashion.

In the future, the owners hope to bring some of the activities they offer in the San Francisco store, such as story time and birthday parties, to the Menlo Park store, which has a table where kids can play or read while their parents shop.

Why is the shop called Bubble? Marina Levy and Anna Arzhintar said they wanted to create a name that was fun, easy to remember, and brought children to mind. Bubbles are associated with children having fun, plus it is easy to remember.

Since its opening, the Menlo Park Bubble has received praise from the public and has had many customers, including mothers, aunts, and grandparents.

"We are very happy to be in Menlo Park," says Anna. "The people have been very welcoming and the reception has been extremely warm and inviting. We are just inviting everybody to come and visit the store."

Bubble in Menlo Park is located on 728 Santa Cruz Ave. For more information, check the Web site at www.gotbubble.com or call 322-1700. ■

MILES FILES

The employees told me I would probably get the phone, and if the store did sell out, they would tell me before I got to the front of the line. So I waited.

The man right in front of me got his phone. I then became the very first person in line, and waited 10 minutes more before they told me they were sold out. I wasn't served water that day, and had risked dehydration for nothing.

The next day (now July 18), I called the Apple Stanford Store and learned they had three black 16gig phones. I alerted my mother that this might be the day, and rushed to the mall and waited in line for two hours.

I called my mom about an hour into the wait and pleaded with her to come and meet me as I felt this was the day. I was right. I was successful. I got my phone.

However, I was charged $499 instead of the advertised $299 due to a computer record glitch that said we did not qualify for the $299 price. They said I had to buy it for $499, then go to an AT&T store and get them to give us the refund of $200.

My mother about went insane. But she told me I had to get my refund so this glitch forced me to drive around for four hours to all the different AT&T stores in Mountain View, Palo Alto and Burlingame to get the refund I was due. I finally got the $200 credit certificate at the AT&T store in Palo Alto on Page Mill Road.

The story does not end here. When I finally started to use the phone, problems arose. Many application errors appeared, and I had to restart the phone multiple times.

In addition, using the Internet isn't much quicker than on the old model, and the new 3G network doesn't have great range. But I do have the newest gadget on Earth.

I learned one lesson from all this: Never trust a man who wears a black turtle neck in the middle of July. ■

Let's Ask Ann . . .

Dear Ann, a super agent...

Our home is listed for sale and our agent has a buyer for the property. Is it legal for her to be both the sellers and buyers agent? Thanks, Robert & Jean

Dear Robert & Jean,

Absolutely! An agent may act as both the listing and selling agent provided the agent has made a disclosure and the principals have given their consent. Certain conditions apply in the agreement: 1. The agent will not disclose to the seller what the buyer is willing to pay. 2. The agent will not disclose to the buyer what price the seller is willing to sell their house for.

All the best,
Ann Griffiths
