

Goodbye from Miles: My last 'Miles Files'

By Miles McMullin

Six years and two months, 72 articles, and thousands of words later, I reach this moment: my final Miles Files.

When I started writing the column in sixth grade, I never thought I would write as long as I have, nor enjoy it as much. It was my first internship, and now it is part of my identity.

It helped me understand what it is to live with a deadline, and to respect those who write for a living. I have a taste for journalism now, and it provided me fodder for my college essays.

The world has changed so much during these six years and my articles reflected those changes. When I began writing there were no iPods, and my very first column concerned the Columbia space shuttle crash.

Writing Miles Files, I got to experience the life of an investigative reporter as I interviewed school officials who became defensive about their earthquake emergency plans. Many of my articles documented my life from age 11 to 17 and provided memories that I would never have recorded.

Some are almost too vivid and stressful to remember, such as the time I wrote about the small plane crash I was in. Others are happy memories, such as the time I got a hole-in-one at golf.

I've learned so much and have documented one-third of my life. It began to hit me recently how much I will miss my monthly column. Having the freedom to write about lobster flavored ice cream or my new guitar obsession was fun.

As my life takes me in new directions at UCLA, I will use my skills to pursue new media. Before I sign off, I want to thank my editor, Richard Hine, who has been with me for this entire six years. He has steadfastly edited my columns and taught me to be more conscientious.

Thank you, also, to all my passionate readers. I hope to see you around Woodside. ▀

Barbara's Red Cross adventures continue in Fargo, North Dakota

BARBARA WOOD

In Fargo, North Dakota, they are just now cleaning up the last of the sandbags and clay dikes the residents of this community used to hold back the waters of the Red River and its tributaries this spring.

In late March, just as the daffodils in my garden were fading and the cherry trees beginning to blossom, I flew to Fargo, where a high temperature of 18 degrees was predicted that day.

The American Red Cross needed volunteers to

Are you smarter than a fourth-grader? Maybe not

By Liesl Moldow

There is nothing "Great" about a depression. With many people losing their jobs and people scrambling to survive, our economic situation is frightening. I cringe when I listen to the economic news on the radio. It truly is depressing.

With these thoughts to cheer me, I recently drove to Paye's Place gym in San Carlos for my daughter's Special Olympics Basketball Tournament. I assumed this was a practice and was excited to have the place to ourselves.

I pulled into the crowded parking lot, and searched frantically for my daughter, realizing I missed the memo saying it was not a practice but the real deal.

I found Madeline amidst a cheering group of kids from her buddy class at Encinal School in Atherton.

Mrs. Stroh's class had joined ours to participate in the tournament — another detail I'd missed. As mothers of missed memos do, I pretended I knew all about it and promptly joined in the fun.

They had set up specially sized basketball hoops, and there were various stations for our kids — a passing station, a dribbling station, etc.

Instead of jumping in to assist Madeline, I stood back while her two buddies, Olivia and Madelyn, helped her dribble. One held her hand, and the other bounced the ball. It worked for them, and seemed to work for Madeline.

Once they finished the task, they moved on, dragging Madeline between them, hand in hand. Now Madeline can walk, but slowly, and most people are very careful as they assist her. Not these girls. They meant business and Madeline scuffled along with them in their determined wake.

The passing station was next, and noticing it would be difficult to do the usual bounce passes, they promptly plopped Madeline on the floor and sat beside her, creating a triangle to roll the ball back and forth. They figured a pass is a pass and they were going to accomplish their goal.

The girls noticed me lurking around and when I told them I was Madeline's mom, one of them pointed to Madeline's plastic trach tube and asked, "What's that thing in her throat?"

I began to air my canned speech. "Well, Madeline was born with special differences due to a chromosomal anomaly ... blah, blah." They looked at me blankly. I could tell they weren't buying it.

I shrugged and said, "It helps her breathe." That did it. They nodded, completely satisfied, and heaved Madeline from the floor, hauling her off to another activity.

It struck me as odd that they didn't ask why Madeline was half as tall as they were, or why she doesn't talk. They didn't seem to care that she has the mental age of a newborn, or that she still wears a diaper. No, they just wanted to know what that thing was sticking out of her throat because it kind of got in the way of the basketball.

Their practical acceptance stunned me. I realized that I often make too much of the differences between my daughter and other "normal" kids. Yes, she has issues, but that doesn't mean she can't do things they do, albeit a bit creatively. They instinctively knew that and help those who might be affected by the imminent flooding of the Red River, which runs the length of the state, on the border between North Dakota and Minnesota.

My aunt, Vinnie Biberdorf, a long-time Red Cross volunteer and currently the co-chair of disaster volunteers for the Silicon Valley Red Cross chapter, for which I volunteer, loaned me cold weather gear. As I scrambled to get ready, I told her that it would be fun if we both could get sent to work a Red Cross disaster together.

"I can't go," she said. "You always have all my stuff!"

In the week before my arrival, the residents of Fargo and nearby communities, which have a combined population of nearly 200,000, filled and placed an estimated six million sandbags. They dug up soccer fields and filled trucks with clay for building taller dikes, some reaching far over the heads of those building them.

Thousands of people took off from school and worked to help their neighbors protect themselves from the record high waters — and their hard work paid off. The dikes held the flooding to a minimum, despite the river cresting at 22 feet above flood level.

The local residents proved that being prepared for a disaster can make all the difference.

Because Fargo was badly flooded in 1997, and had experienced a number of smaller floods since then, the community was well prepared with sandbags and materials for building clay dikes, and the equipment and plans for volunteer labor needed to build them.

Once the dikes were built, the local police and the National Guard patrolled them 24 hours a day, calling for backup at the first sign of a leak.

Even so, by April 3, the Red Cross had utilized 1,272 workers in the area. They had opened 10 shelters, served more than 65,000 meals, supplied close to 5,000 health consultations, and provided 44 emergency-response vehicles, which were bringing food and supplies where needed.

They fed the volunteers as they sandbagged, and brought warm drinks to those guarding the dikes deep into the night.

My job was to drive into flooded areas after the water had receded to estimate how much damage had been done to residences. My partner, a retired 6-foot-2-inch military pilot, and I drove hundreds of miles through a starkly beautiful countryside covered with snow, ice and water.

For the first time I realized what "flat" really means. Much of North Dakota was once a prehistoric lake, which left behind rich soil and miles and miles of perfectly flat terrain when it dried up.

Find out how to help the Red Cross prepare the local community for a disaster by visiting the Silicon Valley Red Cross Chapter Website at: siliconvalley-redcross.org. ■ did not spend time lamenting her limitations, but focused on what she could do — even if they had to lend a hand to get the job done.

I sat back, enjoying the maelstrom of madness that reigned that morning. As I later drove away from the gym, the economic news on the radio didn't bother me as much.

I took a cue from some very smart fourth-graders who taught me how to put it in perspective. I decided not to dwell on the why's of what brought us to this dismal point, and instead turned my focus to the more practical how's.

How to just deal with setbacks, how to make the most of what you do have, and how to move on. If you have to adjust your basket, you do it. If you have to be more creative to get the job done, you do it.

But more important, they reminded me that if you have to haul someone else along who needs a bit more help, well, you just do it. ■

ARCHITECTURAL AND SITE CONTROL COMMISSION RECRUITMENT

The Town Council is seeking an individual to serve on the Town's Architectural and Site Control Commission (ASCC). The ASCC is responsible for review of all proposals for significant new development in Portola Valley, including new homes, major residential additions and changes to commercial and other non-residential uses. The ASCC, with staff support, administers the Town's design plans and guidelines, for the purposes of promoting the visual character of the community, minimizing disturbance to the natural setting and ensuring that improvements are properly related to their site and adjacent uses.

The ASCC consists of five (5) members appointed by the Town Council. Regular meetings are held at 8:00 p.m. on the 2nd and 4th Mondays of the month. Since most of the ASCC work is property specific, often on the Monday meeting dates special late afternoon field sessions are conducted to fully consider site and area conditions. The ASCC process involves significant interaction with existing and new Town residents, architects, landscape architects, and contractors.

If you are interested in serving on the ASCC, please submit a letter of interest to the Town Council by Friday, June 5, 2009.
