

Sharing stories and pain

By Barbara Wood

Special to The Almanac

The 18 people gathered around the big table in the back room of a bakery in San Mateo come from different cities, different backgrounds, different faiths and different occupations. But they say they are a family — a family joined by the shared pain of having an addict as a family member or close friend.

As many as three nights a week they gather to share their stories, to learn about addiction, and to provide moral support to each other under the auspices of the Adapt Foundation. Founded less than a year ago by half a dozen people who met in another support group, Adapt now sponsors meetings three nights a week in three different locations in San Mateo County.

"It grew to be a family," says one regular. A family, he adds, "willing to take other family members in."

"We offer support and love in a group environment," explained another group member.

Carol Kahm, who is working toward a master's degree in psychology, is the meeting facilitator. Not only does Ms. Kahm study the science of addiction, but she brings her personal experience of having three addicts who are close relations.

To give those attending Adapt meetings the freedom to talk openly about their experiences, one of Ms. Kahm's rules for the group is: "What is said in the group stays in the group." In that spirit, The Almanac is not identifying those quoted in this story, and is changing certain identifying characteristics such as age or sex to protect their privacy.

"You don't talk about this (addiction) like you would other diseases," said one father. "We have guilt over it happening and we have shame over it happening." That guilt and shame, he said, doesn't really come from the reaction of outsiders, though. "I think it's all internal," he said.

Ms. Kahm said addiction needs to be brought out into the open, however. "That's what helps perpetuate addiction — everyone keeps quiet about it," she said. "The addiction is not the worst thing that can happen. It is treatable."

One of the founders of the organization has a son who grew up in one of the Peninsula's most expensive communities, attended an elite private high school, and graduated from an Ivy League college before becoming a heroin addict.

Carol Kahm, who leads a support group for family and friends of addicts, explains how addiction affects not only the addict but all their loved ones, at a recent Adapt meeting.

"Crack is way worse than heroin," his mother said. "Meth is, I guess, the absolute worst."

The son recently celebrated his birthday in jail, awaiting sentencing on a felony burglary charge.

"Drug addicts are not those terrible street people in East Palo Alto — they're everybody's kids," the mother said.

Another group member's son, a product of a similar background but whose addiction began while he attended a private high school, just graduated from his third treatment program in a year.

Some of the drug dealers, selling heroin, methamphetamines and other "hard drugs," are also former classmates of their children, he said. "There are no socio-economic borders when it comes to drugs," he said.

Ms. Kahm agreed. "It does happen in Menlo Park and Palo Alto and Atherton and Woodside and the Presidio."

Adapt's founders met in a support group for the families of those going through addiction treatment. They found that program so valuable that when it lost its funding they formed Adapt, meeting at first in Ms. Kahm's living room.

"You need somewhere to share your story where you're not judged," one parent said.

How I spent the summer

It was a busy summer here in our 120-year-old house.

We started off by doubling the usual household population from three to six so everyone could attend Brenna's high school graduation.

Even with a five-bedroom house, squeezing in extra people was not easy, largely because when Caitlin moved to New York last summer she left most of her worldly possessions behind. Making her room habitable for Grandma involved some creative closet-stuffing and a floor-length table cloth on a table in the next room that hid a lot.

Unfortunately, clearing out the room inspired me to get a new rug, and paint, and change the curtains. So, strangely enough, it was not quite ready by the time we picked my mom up at the airport.

Nonetheless, we survived the graduation (where we had quite good seats because my husband was so anxious to get out of the house that he went very, very early to reserve them).

We also survived the brunch for 15 that followed. (I did forget to pull out the muffins I had made and the frittata took so long to cook that no one was hungry by the time it arrived, but still. ...)

BARBARA WOOD

And then we survived the barbecue for 45 the next day as well.

I slept the next three days, before guilt about not entertaining my mom took over and we decided to go to the art museum at Stanford.

Which did not happen, because my mom leaned over to retrieve a lipstick, fell on that new rug, and twisted her knee. Instead of visiting the art museum, we got to meet some nice firefighters and paramedics and visited Stanford's emergency room instead.

We came home with a wheelchair and a diagnosis of a broken knee.

That Monday I took my mom to see a doctor about the knee, and on Tuesday I took her back to Stanford for what turned out to be a five-hour surgery to repair it.

After a short stay, we brought her home, until she developed a fever and the need to visit the restroom more often than was strictly convenient with a wheelchair. We were back to the ER, where she was admitted and put into isolation until they confirmed she did not have a dreaded, very infectious bug that is often picked up in hospitals.

They released her three days and many tests later, when she was better, with no idea what had been wrong.

By then, I had cancelled two flights home for Mom and was beginning to despair that she would ever make it back to Oregon, or that I would ever be allowed out of the house for more than two hours at a time again.

So I arranged to have one of my sisters, who is a registered nurse, fly from Idaho to help out, and another sister to drive from Oregon to bring them all home.

A month into her 10-day visit, my mom made it home again. We all spent the rest of the summer recovering, and I am happy to report she and everyone else is doing great.

I'm a little worried, though, because we have another graduation in December.

Friends forged by Harry Potter

By Katie Blankenberg

The Harry Potter book and movie series is the classic story of good and evil, growing up, and the real meaning of friendships — all bound up in a magical story.

It is no surprise why each movie premier causes frenzy at movie theaters. The sixth movie in the series, "Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince," opened at theaters on July 15. On the night of July 14, crowds of Harry Potter fans flocked the movie theaters to be the first to see the premier at the midnight showing.

Katie Blankenberg lives in Portola Valley and is a sophomore at Sacred Heart Prep in Atherton.

Fans dressed in Harry Potter attire, such as robes, glasses, scarves, and wizard hats. Among these fans is a group of friends: Allyson Ashmead of Portola Valley, Jillian Nielsen and Laura Sherrard of Woodside, and Maddie Scannell of Menlo Park. Jillian and Maddie are sophomores at Saint Ignatius High School in San Francisco and Laura and Allyson are sophomores at Saint Francis High School in Mountain View.

All four of these teen "muggles" (a person who doesn't possess magical abilities) have been friends since kindergarten and have bonded through their interest in Harry Potter.

All four of these teen "muggles" have been friends since kindergarten and have bonded through their interest in Harry Potter. From left, they are Laura Sherrard, Jill Nielsen, Maddie Scannell and Ally Ashmead.

When the first movie, "Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone," opened in theaters back in 2001, these four friends started a tradition: They pledged to attend every Harry Potter movie premier together. Jillian's dad Charlie often was the one driving them to the midnight showing, with the other dads alternating throughout the years.

The teens started reading the books at a very young age. At the beginning, the girls had the books read to them by family members. Laura's older sister Amy began reading the books to her.

"I love how J.K. Rowling can turn a small idea into an entire world that engrosses the reader," says Laura Sherrard.

Jillian's dad, Charlie, read her the first four books. When the fifth book was released, she was one of the first to pick up a copy of "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix" during a midnight release. She was surprised to find she had purchased a misprinted edition, which repeats 41 pages.

Jillian read the entire book (870 pages) in 24 hours.

"J.K. Rowling has made up this whole world that draws people in and makes them use their imagination," Jillian says. "I really enjoyed growing up with the movies and the books."

So, on July 14, this group of excited muggles joined devoted fans and made their way to the Century 20 theater in downtown Redwood City to see "Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince." They waited in line for four hours. It was definitely worth the wait, they say.

"I really enjoyed the movie," Allyson says. "I'm glad that it was very similar to the book. I want to see it again."

For the next two movies, you can be sure that Jillian, Allyson, Maddie and Laura will be eagerly waiting at the midnight showings with wands in hand and a bag of the Jelly Slugs, Chocolate Frogs and Earwax

"I'm blessed and grateful to have you people in my life," he said.

After the story was shared, others at the meeting offered reactions.

"It just shows how people we love can drive us absolutely nuts," said one. "We're always waiting for something to happen."

Carol reminded those at the meeting to remember "it is our choice — whether or not to get sucked into their addiction."

One of the participants said that lesson is a hard one. "People come in wanting to do something for the addict, but leave trying to do something for themselves."

"Being the parent of an addict is, truthfully, having to be able to do everything contrary to being a good mother," said one of the participants who has a child in jail right now. "Basically we can't save them from themselves."

Like other chronic diseases, addicts also suffer remissions.

"I can't stop going to these meetings because I have a drug addict in my life the rest of my life. He's not going to be cured, ever," said one father.

ADAPT

Now they meet in the back room of a bakery, in a meeting room at a library and in a psychiatrist's office. Nearly 50 people a week attend the meetings, and 10 volunteer board members run the organization. They receive no government funding and survive solely on donations.

Adapt hopes to soon begin also meeting in East Palo Alto, where board members feel there is a great need for their services, if funding can be found.

At a recent meeting, a burly single father told about what he had just gone through after his former girlfriend, the mother of his child, was kicked out of a rehab program. As the woman spiraled out of control, he turned to the friends he had made at Adapt meetings to help him through it.

Let's Ask Ann . . .

Dear Ann, No time like the present..

With home prices dropping is it a good time to buy a house! Should we wait until the market improves?
Thanks, Robert & Sandy

Dear Robert & Sandy,
Three reasons to buy now: 1) There are studies to suggest that home prices may be at their low and are going up. 2) In a slower market sellers are more amenable to negotiating. 3) There is a lot of inventory to choose from, which translates to lower home prices. It's a buyers market, so take advantage of it!!
All the best,
