When Imogen came to visit

Portraits taken by famous photographer Imogen Cunningham are recently rediscovered at Atherton retirement community

Story by Sheryl Nonnenberg

Photographs by Imogen Cunningham

In the winter of 1976, Imogen Cunningham traveled from her home in San Francisco to Atherton in order to take pictures of the nuns living at the Oakwood Retirement Center, on the campus of Sacred Heart Schools.

She was nearly 93 years old and was still hard at work on a project she felt very passionate about, a book that would feature adults over the age of 90 who were still leading active and purposeful lives.

While at Oakwood, she photographed eight of the elderly residents. These vintage prints, carefully wrapped in acid-free paper and placed in an archival box, were recently found in the facility's archives by Sister Clare Pratt, Oakwood's community life director. They tell a story of an artist and her subjects, all strong and independent women who led rich and fulfilled lives.

The photographs of the nuns were taken for a book entitled "After Ninety" (published posthumously in 1977). Ms. Cunningham had come up with the idea both as a way to confront her own aging process and to celebrate the long life and achievements of those she photographed.

The book includes a variety of people from all walks of life. There are writers and poets, scientists and neighbors who lived near her home on Green Street.

The nuns at Oakwood came to be part of the book as a result

It starts with our caregivers. We carefully screen nearly 25 applicants for each caregiver we hire. Only the best are good enough for Home Care Assistance!

We follow this with extensive training. Finally we invite geriatric experts to meet with our caregivers so that they are up-to-date with the newest ideas about senior care.

Hourly and Live-In Care. Our caregiving services focus on two basic types of care: hourly and live-in. The service you choose is determined by your particular needs.

Hourly caregiving works well for many families. In this situation we provide trained caregivers on an hourly basis. Here the caregiver focuses all her attention exclusively on the senior.

Live-in care differs from hourly care in that we provide personal aides on a daily basis. Live-in caregivers are often the best choice for those seniors who need the companionship of another person, but who do not have intense “all the time” personal needs.

At Home Care Assistance we mean it when we talk about providing the best in senior care—whether it is on an hourly basis or a live-in basis.

of a barter made with a young nun who had contacted the famous photographer, requesting that she review and critique some photographs she had taken. Ms. Cunningham agreed to look at her work, but only if the nun would introduce her to nuns over the age of 90 who would agree to be photographed.

It was not unusual for Imogen Cunningham to receive requests for advice from novice photographers. By the 1970s, she had been a professional photographer for seven decades, with dozens of exhibitions at prestigious museums, two published books and a long list of honorary degrees.

Born in 1883, she was a strong and independent spirit from birth. At a time when women had few options other than marriage and motherhood, she was encouraged to become an artist.

When she was 18, she bought a 4x5 view camera and enrolled in a correspondence course in order to learn about photography. She wanted to major in art in college, but the University of Washington did not have such a program. She focused her studies on chemistry, thinking that it would help her to understand the science behind the medium.

Once she earned her degree, she took a position in the studio of Edward Curtis (known for his portraits of Native Americans), where she learned the difficult process of platinum printing. A small scholarship from her university sorority allowed her to travel to Dresden, Germany, where she studied photographic chemistry and published several scientific papers. Upon her return to Seattle, she opened her own portrait studio, which was immediately successful.

At this time, the prevailing style of photography was called Pictorialism and was characterized by a soft-focus, romantic tableaux that were influenced by the paintings of the Pre-Raphaelites. Her early portrait photographs reflect this style, with subjects captured in dreamy, allegorical settings.

In 1915, Ms. Cunningham married graphic artist Roi Partridge and the couple moved to San Francisco. She gave birth to three children over the next three years and soon found herself in the role of faculty wife, as Roi took a position teaching art at Mills College.

Ms. Cunningham established a small business taking portraits of Mills coeds and she also did what women artists had been doing for centuries, focusing her artistic attentions on her immediate environment.

She began to take close-up photographs of plants and flowers in her garden. Her magnolia series, lush, detailed black-and-white studies of the interior of this graceful flower, would become one of her most famous works.

Throughout the 1920s and 30s, she continued to take photographs and her work began to be shown by galleries and museums on the East and West Coast. She was approached by Vanity Fair magazine and was hired to take pictures of dancer Martha Graham and Hollywood actors such as Cary Grant and Spencer Tracy. The travel and separation took a toll on the marriage and Imogen and Roi were divorced in 1934. They remained friends and she never remarried.

Now free to pursue her career and travel, she bought a small cottage in San Francisco and built a darkroom. She became part of the pioneering f/64 Group, which advocated for "straight photography," free from any sort of manipulation. Others in the group included Ansel Adams and Willard Van Dyke. Their simple and direct approach to the medium changed the course of photography.

For the next 30 years, she gained recognition as an artist who could do it all: portraits, still-life, nudes and landscapes. Her work was shown at the Oakland Museum, the George Eastman House and the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art.

She began to teach at the San Francisco Art Institute and became a legendary figure in the city of San Francisco, walking around town in her trademark black cape, camera around her neck and always ready for that next photograph.

Her approach was as direct and honest as her personality, no matter what the subject matter. In every image she sought out the truth, and wrote in her book, "After Ninety," about finding "beauty in the commonest things."

The portraits taken at Oakwood are typical of her work in many respects. They are simple and straight-forward, with the focus on the face of the subject. She once wrote that portraiture is very difficult, because most people are not happy with themselves and do not like to see the truth revealed in a photograph. She was adept at making her subjects feel at ease, and in the process she was able to get to their true essence and spirit, free of any pretense.

One of the ways she did this was by capturing the person in a favorite place or with a treasured object. Sister Ethel Teegarden stands in front of a statue of Mary — very appropriate in view of her life spent in the Religious of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, an order that was founded by a woman (Saint Madeleine Sophie Barat) in 1800.

Sisters Christine Bogner and Mildred Murphy were both gardeners and were captured amid the bucolic grounds of the Atherton campus.

There is no attempt to sugar-coat the challenges of old age, as can be seen in the portrait of Louise Bujan. Wheel-chair bound, the elderly nun sits in quiet contemplation, reciting the the strength, devotion and years of wisdom accrued by the aged nuns, most of whom had enjoyed long careers as educators. In an oral history at the Smithsonian Institution, she explained her success at portraiture in the following way, "I turn people into human beings by not making them into gods."

After her session at Oakwood, the artist sent complimentary copies of the prints to the retirement home, where they were displayed for a short time. Six of the eight photographs were included in "After Ninety," with the simple description, "Nuns at Sacred Heart/Oakwood."

Imogen Cunningham died in June 1976, just months after her visit to Atherton. She had enjoyed a long and prolific career, and had ensured the legacy of her work by establishing the Imogen Cunningham Trust, which preserves her negatives and oversees the exhibition of her prints.

The Oakwood portraits are a testament to the strength and resilience of both the artist and her subjects, and to Imogen Cunningham's no-nonsense philosophy towards life: "... you just have to work and find your own way. Everybody can do it. If I can do it, everybody can." 3 ▣

Alan McGee of Portola Valley is showing his photographic exhibit, "Onions Observed: An Animistic Perspective," during July at the Portola Art Gallery in Menlo Park.

The exhibit revolves around half of an onion, how it changes over time, and Mr. McGee's photographic response to those changes. For the exhibit, he purchased a 10-pound bag of yellow onions to slice.

"These half onions, simply presented against a black background, seem, to me, informed with animism — a primitive world view that non-human entities possess a spiritual or supernatural essence," he said. "These onions, over time, took on qualities that catalyzed my imagination."

Prairie Rose Band performs

The Prairie Rose Band brings "music of the Old West and of the West that never was" to Menlo Park with a free program on Saturday, July 12.

The performance will begin at 11 a.m. in the Menlo Park City Council Chambers at 701 Laurel St. in the Civic Center.

Sponsored by the Friends of the Menlo Park Library, the event spotlights the cowboy-outfit-wearing band whose wide-ranging repertoire includes songs popular during the Civil War, 1930s and 40s western swing, country hits, a bit of Stephen Foster and Cole Porter, and audience requests.

The band, which travels throughout the greater Bay Area, is made up of four musicians: George Martin on banjo and vocals, Paula Scholten on guitar and vocals, Gene Tortora on eight-string dobro and vocals, and Mark Hedin on bass.

Free wheelchair-accessible van service is available for Menlo Park area seniors and people with disabilities. Call 330-2512 for van reservations.

500 Help Wanted

Multimedia Sales Representatives
Embarcadero Media is headquartered in Palo Alto and operates diverse media enterprises, including the region's most respected and award-winning community newspapers and specialty publications, websites and e-mail marketing products.

Locally-owned and independent for 34 years, we publish the Palo Alto Weekly, Mountain View Voice and Almanac on the Peninsula and the Pleasanton Weekly. In each of these communities our papers are the dominant, best-read and most respected among its various competitors. We also operate extremely popular interactive community news and information websites in all of our cities, plus unique online-only operations in Danville and San Ramon. Our flagship website, Palo Alto Online (<http://paloaltoonline.com>), attracts more than 150,000 unique visitors and 600,000 page views a month.

As the first newspaper in the United States to publish on the web back in 1994, the Palo Alto Weekly is recognized throughout the state and nation as a leader in transforming from a print-only news organization to an innovative multimedia company offering advertisers and readers new and effective products. In 2013, the Weekly was judged the best large weekly newspaper in the state by the California Newspaper Publishers Association. Its web operation, Palo Alto Online, was judged the best newspaper website in California.

The Palo Alto Weekly and Embarcadero Media are seeking smart, articulate and dedicated experienced and entry-level sales professionals who are looking for a fast-paced and dynamic work environment of people committed to producing outstanding journalism and effective marketing for local businesses.

As a Multimedia Account Executive, you will contact and work with local businesses to expand their brand identity and support their future success using marketing and advertising
