Garden as gallery

Filoli displays 40 pieces of sculpture in its gardens

Story by Sheryl Nonnenberg | Photos by Michelle Le

Whether it's tulips in spring, roses in summer or the elaborate decorations and festive programs at Christmastime, there is always beauty to savor at Filoli.

The early 20th century country estate, designated as a historic site of the National Trust for Historic Preservation, consists of a 36,000-square-foot residence surrounded by 654 acres of land. It's considered a must-see for visitors to the Peninsula.

Now, there's another reason to make the drive to Filoli: the 2015 Summer Sculpture Exhibit. Forty pieces of sculpture made of metal, stone and wood are situated around the meticulously tended gardens, and even inside the house. The works will be on view until Sept. 13.

The idea for the exhibition was conceived in 2013 when local sculptor Jeff Owen was asked to place his work in the garden. Jim Salyards, head of horticulture at Filoli, thought it was such a success that he suggested an annual show of sculpture around the grounds.

The inaugural exhibition was held last summer, with more than 100 works of art installed. It was subsequently decided that future exhibitions would feature fewer pieces, given the extraordinary amount of work involved in choosing and installing large-scale outdoor sculptures.

Unlike with a museum or gallery setting, a wide range of issues must be taken into consideration with outdoor installation, including the fragile nature of the vegetation, visitor traffic patterns and the exposure of the sculptures to the elements. For a show of this kind, there's also a need for close coordination among the artists, Filoli staff members and the many volunteer groups that keep the popular estate running.

Emily Newell, volunteer curator for the event, explained that the process of choosing work for this year's exhibition began in November 2014, when a group of volunteers began researching and visiting artist studios. Often, while visiting one sculptor they learned of others working close by. Sometimes one sculptor would recommend another.

Before long, the list had been established at nine artists, who were invited to submit a maximum of five pieces each. All of this year's selected artists live in the Bay Area, and a total of 40 sculptures are in the installation.

For the artists, creating the art was just half of the commitment. All transportation and installation costs are borne by the sculptors, with on-site assistance given by Filoli staff. Filoli receives a 30 percent commission if a sculpture is sold. Ms. Newell said 10 pieces were purchased last year.

"Since Filoli is such a prestigious venue, I was without hesitation in participating," said Santa Cruz-based artist Marilyn Kuksht, who works in welded steel. A former executive at Bank of America, she left her successful career, took some classes in welding and set up her own shop.

Working with recycled materials and "industrial detritus," Ms. Kuksht says she finds inspiration in "a piece of junk or a leftover remnant from an industrial job."

Visitors encounter "Carmel Karma," one of her six pieces, sited among the trees outside Filoli's Visitor and Education Center. The cool blue color is a result of the artist's love of beautiful finishes, which she calls "a signature of my work." Its ribbons of steel reach skyward, mimicking the branches of the trees in the surrounding olive orchard.

An exhibition catalog, complete with detailed map and a list of the sculptures, allows visitors to wander through the grounds at their own pace. Additionally, 12 specially trained docents will lead guided sculpture walks on select Saturdays and Thursdays throughout the summer. Reservations are required.

"Summer is the best season for a display such as this since we are in between major plantings," Ms. Newell said. The prolonged drought has also opened up opportunities to site sculptures in otherwise occupied locations. The lower terrace, formerly a lush green lawn, has been allowed to dry, making it the perfect spot for Karen Cusolito's "Tumble Leaf #6." The large steel piece, heart-shaped and intricately wrought, comes equipped with artificial-turf "pillows," which make for a great place to sit and contemplate the beauty of the estate and the nearby foothills.

Payson McNett was so inspired by the beauty of the grounds at Filoli that he decided to create a site-specific piece for the show. After viewing the orientation video that explains the history of the estate, he said, he was intrigued by the two families who have owned the property over the years.

The Bourn family bought the estate in 1907, held it until 1936 and gave it its name, a shortened version of Mr. Bourn's personal credo: "Fight for a just cause; Love your fellow man; Live a good life." In 1937, the Roth family bought the estate, maintaining it until 1975, when the family donated a significant part of the estate to the National Trust and the rest to the Filoli Center.

"I found myself looking at the imagery of gold mine shafts and sailing ships," Mr. McNett said (the Bourns owned the Empire gold mine, the Roths a shipping business, Matson Navigation). "So when I chose wood and rope as my materials, it was influenced by the two family businesses."

His "Foundations," located in the meadow behind the house, is a wood-encased "mine shaft," jutting above ground, “Carmel Karma” by Marilyn Kuksh. The ribbons of steel mimic the branches of trees in the olive orchard.

that changes perspective as one walks around it. The top of the shaft is covered with very tightly strung rope: a nod to Matson Navigation.

Many of the pieces in the exhibition reflect the natural environment in which they are placed, with allusions to flora and fauna. Ms. Newell said the effort was to focus on the abstract, with no sculptures of the human figure. The selection committee also strove to avoid political statements. “Modern works as long as it’s sort of sedate,” Ms. Newell noted.

Though the pieces are not a permanent part of the estate, they’ve been made to look as if they belong. The warm, golden patina of the bronze works in particular melds seamlessly with the colorful flowers, vines and fruit-bearing trees.

In the middle of the vegetable garden, Ms. Kuksh’s “Lifting” is perfectly poised atop an “herb spiral” that serves as a natural base. Dedicated to soldiers who have returned from combat with PTSD, the piece has steel “arms” that lift toward heaven, but the center piece is bent and twisted.

In the corner of the Chartres Garden stands Adon Valenziano’s “Formicidae Stirpis,” a giant, bronze, ant-like creature. It’s the only piece in the show that is situated in a flower bed — all other pieces are placed on bases — and it seems to emerge from the ground. It sounds scary, but is actually quite fun to encounter in the midst of lush flowers and willowy trees.

Be sure to go inside the house to see the sensuous and carefully crafted sculptures in hardwood by Belmont artist Ruth Waters. And on your way out, take time to view the new exhibition in the Visitor and Education Center. “Angles, Lines and Curves,” a show of photography that features notable and historic buildings around the world, is a perfect complement to the geometry and architectonic quality of the sculptures on display.

Freelance writer Sheryl Nonnenberg can be emailed at nonnenberg@aol.com.

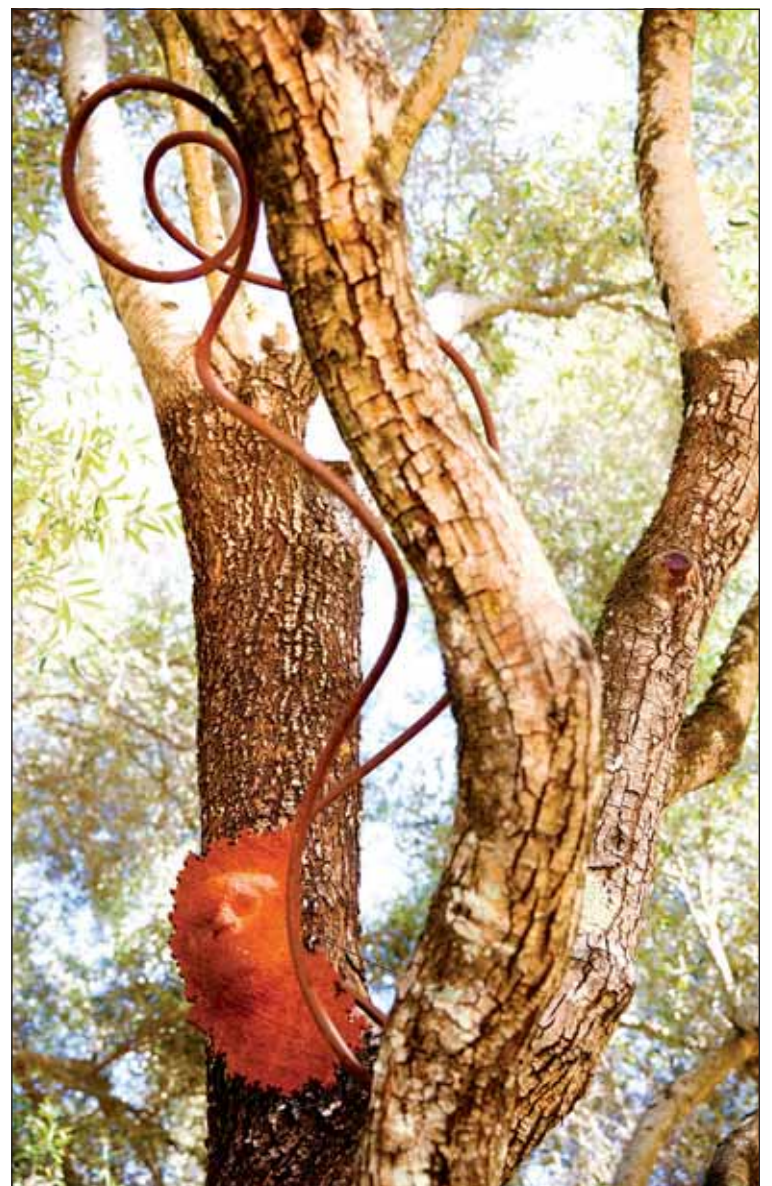

“Lifted” by Marilyn Kuksh, who finds inspiration in “a leftover remnant from an industrial job.”

“Foundations” by Payson McNett is a wood-encased “mine shaft,” jutting above ground. It was created for the exhibit and was influenced by the businesses of the families that had lived on the property.

A volunteer for more than three decades, Suzanne Legallet examines Karen Cusolito’s “Tumble Leaf #4” while leading a tour.

Actor aims to debunk myths about Ty Cobb

By Cristian Ponce
Special to the Almanac

Actor Norm Coleman will reenact baseball legend Ty Cobb, who lived in Atherton for many years, in a performance at 1 p.m. Saturday, July 11, at the San Mateo County History Museum in Redwood City.

In 1936, Mr. Cobb was among the first five players elected to the National Baseball Hall of Fame. During his career, he set many records, including hitting over .300 for 23 consecutive years, still the best in Major League Baseball history.

Mr. Coleman said he is out to debunk myths surrounding Ty Cobb that arose after a 1960 book portrayed him as a violent person and a racist, messages also conveyed in the 1994 film "Cobb" starring Tommy Lee Jones.

"He was so damn complicated and complex and the movie didn't help," Mr. Coleman said. "Anybody who has seen this movie comes away saying, 'My god that guy was a monster; he was a devil!' — but he wasn't that way."

Mr. Coleman said he began reading up on Ty Cobb about 11 years ago and discovered a number of untrue statements and lies. "There's so much misinformation about Mr. Cobb out there," he said. "There's so many myths about him. Dirty ball-player, fighting with everybody, fighting with his teammates, fighting with fans in the stands. He's not a saint, but he's not a total sinner. He's not the devil in spikes."

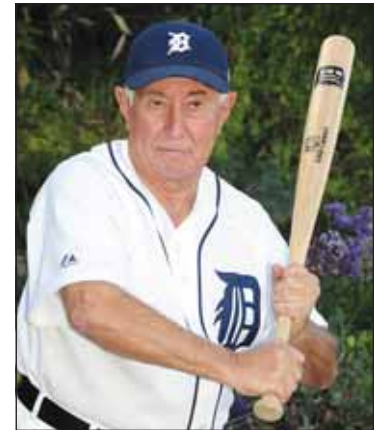

A Half Moon Bay resident, Mr. Coleman will give a 40-minute performance, followed by a question-and-answer session.

Connoisseurs' Marketplace slated for July 18-19 in downtown Menlo

A new Culinary Arts Corner will feature demonstrations by 10 Bay Area chefs at the 29th annual Connoisseurs' Marketplace on Saturday and Sunday, July 18-19, along Santa Cruz Avenue in downtown Menlo Park.

The street festival, presented by the Menlo Park Chamber of Commerce, will be held from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day, showcasing art in the form of jewelry, glassware, paintings, ceramics and photography. At Gourmet Island, food vendors will offer savory and sweet bites to sample and purchase.

Music on the stage at Fremont

Actor Norm Coleman: "There's so much misinformation about Ty Cobb out there."

"I will be talking about Cobb growing up in Georgia, his early playing days with the Detroit Tigers and how he got there," Mr. Coleman said. "And I will talk about some of the people he knew. Obviously Babe Ruth, Joe DiMaggio, and Shoeless Joe Jackson."

Mr. Coleman said he will explain what made Mr. Cobb such a student of the game of baseball and how he went on to make his fortune later in life.

"If you attend the show you may not leave loving Mr. Cobb, but you're going to learn a lot about the man and you're going to learn another side of the man that maybe you didn't know."

Mr. Coleman is a professional photographer who began acting at age 70 at the Coastal Repertory Theatre in Half Moon Bay and fell in love with the experience.

The reenactment will be free with the price of admission to the museum, which is $6 for adults and $4 for seniors and students. The reenactment will be held in Courtroom A of the museum, located at 2200 Broadway in Redwood City. ■

Veteran local shopkeeper opens No. 6 in Menlo Park

By Kate Daly
Special to the Almanac

Lee Murphy of Menlo Park just opened her sixth women's retail store on the Peninsula, so naturally she is calling her newest shop No. 6.

The address is 883 Santa Cruz Ave. in Menlo Park, but the store's entrance faces the parking lot next to Draeger's. The location is very close to where Ms. Murphy started out in 1993 with her first store, Calla, and is a short hop away from where she now runs Kicks on Evelyn Street.

Given Kicks' small floor plan, she says it was challenging for customers to move around and browse through all the merchandise. When an opportunity came to lease additional space, she made her move. Clothing and jewelry stayed at Kicks. Shoes, handbags, hats and scarves are now on display at No. 6.

She designed the new store herself, describing it as "so urban, so Soho, so new to Menlo Park with its fresh design."

Targeted at "women of all ages," No. 6 carries lines such as Annabel Ingall bags from Australia, MZ Wallace bags from

New York, Frye boots, Helen Kaminski hats, and Theodora & Callum scarves.

The doors opened on June 13, but the grand opening will take place on Thursday, July 16, from 4 to 7 p.m.

On July 16 and 17, a portion of the proceeds will go toward Random Acts of Flowers Silicon Valley, a recent newcomer to the area. The nonprofit relies on volunteers to recycle donated vases and flowers, turn them into bouquets, and deliver them to patients at health care facilities on the Peninsula.

Ms. Murphy said she is excited about supporting the cause because making people smile "makes me happy." ■
